Half-Back Play.

G. P. WILSON.

subject of half-back play would far exceed the limits of this article in which an attempt has been made to indicate along what lines and towards what objects player in this position should direct his efforts, rather than to state what he should do in all or any special circumstances.

A few words as to physical fitness will not. I trust, be considered out of placehere, for in no department of the game is this so necessary as at half, accuracy with the head as with the foot. It is far too common a sight to see a half-back play a thoroughly sound game a mile, (long distances should never be at- tedious. tempted), gone through three or four times | An occasion on which the task of a halfa week, will be found amply sufficient for a back becomes almost heart-rending is when person playing regularly in matches once or the three inside forwards come down in a twice a week. If in the neighbourhood of body, with the ball at their feet. If he a field a still better plan is to take a foot- tackles one the ball is passed, if he tackles ball out and kick about with it, especially the second the same process is repeated, if there are several persons. By this means and so on almost ad infinitum. But alnot only is the requisite exercise obtained, though almost without hope of getting the but with it is combined practice in shoot- ball he must again and again return to the ing, dribbling, passing, &c. The first object of a half should be to prevent an opponent from getting the ball, to tackle his second. It is usually a difficult question, and at times almost impossible to say whether the better plan on any given occasion be to rush forward, or to wait and tackle. HONOKONO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1900.

Among farmers in the old country, there is a useful proverb, which runs thus 'Everybody knows how to manage a kicking horse except the driver.' Morcover, there is a saying of Terence, Que homines tot sententiae, which is, being interpreted, 'So many men, so many minds.' The famous story of the father and son who took an ass to market to sell, makes this clear to the put in possession of this information by the actual experience of his 'teens. His panacea for the healing of the wound is that, each Power should contribute to the control of the capital and at the same time assume its special sphere of action. But would the Powers accept such joint control words quoted above Quot homines tot sen at the capital and assume the sole responsibility for a definite section of the empire, and would all agree meanwhile to an open door ! If the millenium spirit were abroad, if might be possible, but that day is not yet. An anonymous writer, in the Fortnightly, asks 'Why not a treaty with Russia? His points are, Russia does not want China, which she could not assimilate. Russian policy is against the acquisition of unassiinilable populations and that Russia is in no way antagonistic to British India, as indeed most of her Asiatic dominions were in her possession before our Indian empire was even at its birth. The writer is somewhat sarcastic, over the stupidity of British statesmanship in China. We proclaim the integrity of China without any intelligent or merely obstinate effort to reassert the primacy of our diplomacy at Peking, or even to maintain its parity with that of Russia. We consecrate the Middle Kingdom to an integrity of putrescence without any more lucid conception than in the of Turkey, that the propping 6 up of a decaying despotism necessitates diberal indulgence of its crime. On the other hand with inexplicable complacency we reserve our right in the last resort to an almost impossible share of China, without taking the least steps towards the preparation of the masterly plan and the enormous forces which would be required to vindicate the chim. The remedies for this great peril are, Sir] Robert Hart fears, outside the range practical politics, and, full of forebodings he looks forward to the future. Nothing but partition, a difficult and unlikely international settlement; or a mi raculous spread of Christianity in its best form, a not impossible, but scarcely to be hoped for, religious triumph will defor, will avert this result. Is either the one or the other within the limits of practical politics or practical propagandism? I fear not. And if not, what? Then the lawlessness of the present sprising must be condened and the Manchu Dynasiy supported; to this end it will be made to * lose face as little as possible, but trade in arms, will not cease, and our sons and grandsons will reap the whirlwind.

One point of America's colonial expansion is developing which is, in every sense, objectionable, and that is her cocky interference in international policy, as if, forsooth, the conquest of two such paltry islands as Cuba and Manila—the latter still unpacified—gave her the right to dictate terms to the rest of the world. Mr Conger's instructions to protest against the just punishment of the princely fiends at whose instigation so much innocent blood has been shed, reads like the fantastic utterances of the dual Kings of Barrataria. If any incentive to revenge, stern and sharp, (which, in this case, means simple justice and no more), were needed to urge on the Angle-Saxon peoples to carry the busi-ness through to the atmost limit of its judicial exact tude, a perusal of the ter-ribly pitiful and pathetic lutters of Mrs Atwater should be sufficient. Mr Wildman, you know the truth and should be able to advise your countrymen what an awful mistake they are making, and it is your duty so to do. America's protest, however, will probably have but little effect on the ultimate settlement, which tened with an ice factory, and honestly will work itself out to its predestined end sine sentimental twaddle.
